Students visit Capitol; protest possible cuts

By Bernie L. Williamson

Student reaction to President Reagan's proposed student financial aid cuts was demonstrated in a rally on the steps of the nation's Capitol March 2.

UNO Student Senators Jon Taute and Mark Norris were in Washington during that time, attending seminars and talking to Nebraska congressional representatives concerning the cuts.

The rally was very successful, said Taute. "Because of the number of students there, it had to put a lot of pressure on Congress," he said.

Taute said he hopes students around the country will write letters to Congress expressing their concern over the proposed cuts. He mentioned an idea proposed at the Washington rally to "put a little SALT in the envelope."

SALT stands for Students Allied for Loans and Trusts, a letter-writing campaign initiated at Wright State University in Dayton, Ohio.

"I'd like to see something like this done on a national basis," said Taute.

A UNO letter-writing campaign is planned for next week, said UNO Student President/Regent Florene Langford. "We're not only urging people to write, but to call the White House Public Opinion Number," she said.

Students should also contact their state legislators and request they become involved to halt the cuts, said UNO Director of Financial Aids Robert Pike.

An on-campus voter registration drive is planned for March 17-19. "If we can get all the students on campus registered, that would mean 15,000 voters," said Langford. "That would hold quite a bit of political clout," she added.

"We will also be holding various press conferences," said Langford. "I'm scheduled to speak on several local talk shows, voicing my concern and strong opposition" to the cuts, she said.

The federal government is currently operating on a temporary budget resolution passed in December. Congress will have to vote on a new budget, including the student aid proposal, by March 31.

Otherwise, there will be no funds authorized for federal programs and government operations. The government would grind to a halt as it did for a short period last December.

"Students tend to walk around in a dream-like state, thinking nothing is going to happen," said Langford.

"The point is to act now, and not react after the throat is cut," she said.

Programs to be phased out by April 1985

Congress cuts student Social Security benefits

By Bernie L. Williamson

Student beneficiaries of the Social Security program may find it more difficult to obtain financial aid in the near future.

The U.S. Social Security Administration for many years has provided financial assistance to students with deceased or retired parents, said Ray Leach, Social Security Administration district manager.

In August 1981, Congress voted to phase out student benefits over a three-year period beginning next July. About 350 UNO students will be affected, according to Robert Pike, director of UNO financial aids.

Congress voted to gradually eliminate student benefits "based on the promise that these students could qualify for other financial aid programs," said Keith Ninemire, associate director of financial aids. Congress is currently considering a proposal that would cut funding to those programs. That would result in an increase of needy students and a decrease in available financial aid, he said.

Full-time students who became eligible for benefits after August 1981 will receive Social Security checks until July. After July, they will no longer be eligible for benefits.

Students who were eligible for Social

Students also will not receive benefits through the summer months, May through August.

"Students will notice a 50 percent drop in the first year," said Ninemire.

For example, a student who normally received $3,600 per year would receive only $1,800, he said. The student would not receive benefits during the four summer months, resulting in a loss of $1,200. That, added to the 25 percent cutback, results in a 50 percent drop.

A lack of information about the changes may also have led a number of students to fill out financial aid forms incorrectly, said Ninemire. Many of them reported figures based on 12 months of social security benefits, instead of eight.

Ninemire said that both the financial aids office and the College Board Service will be double-checking financial aid forms for miscalculations.

Ninemire suggested that students who receive Social Security benefits should check with the Social Security Administration office at 215 No. 17th St. if they have any questions.

By the end of the school year, students should be receiving a pamphlet from the Social Security Administration explaining the changes.

Before the well runs dry ... students pick up their financial aid.

Security benefits before August 1981 will continue to receive benefits until:

- 1) they finish college, or
- 2) they marry, or
- 3) they attain age 22, or

4) until April 1985 — whichever comes first.

Benefit amounts, however, will decrease 25 percent per year starting in September. By April 1985, student Social Security benefits will be completely eliminated.

Professor talks on student rights at seminar

By Gary DiSilvestro

A Creighton University law professor described the NU Board of Regents' decision to block funding for the salaries of student regents as "goofy" last week at UNO.

"There is no (constitutional) problem with paying the student regents," said Richard Shugrue, who spoke at a seminar on students' legal rights.

The program was moderated by Frank Forbes, a professor of law and society at UNO, and also featured Omaha attorney Jarve Garrett as a spokesman for the students' position.

Student President/Regent Florene Langford organized the program and said Shugrue was chosen to represent the administration's position after NU General Counsel Richard Wood declined an invitation to defend the legal position of the regents.

When the regents adopted the new policy on student regent salaries last semester, they said the change was made to comply with the state constitution, which states that regents not be paid. Langford and UNL Student President/Regent Rick Mockler contend that student regents are not covered by this rule, and should receive pay for the work they do as student presidents.

Langford sought an opinion from Wood on the constitutionality of the decision. According to Langford, Wood said the constitution does not prohibit the paying of student regents, but that he would not pursue action against the regents.

Courts

Langford then went to Garrett for legal advice. Garrett wrote an opinion which stated Langford and student leaders should take the matter to court. He said the constitutional amendment which placed students on the board says nothing about pay. Garrett added that it is a matter for the courts, not the board, to determine the legal intent of the constitution.

Richard Hoover, vice chancellor for educational and student services, blocked the use of student fee funds for the purpose of paying Garrett's legal fees. He said Executive Memorandum No. 10 prohibits employees or agents of the university from using tax dollars to seek legal advice from anyone other than Wood.

Langford said she didn't consider student fee money to be the same as tax funds. She also said students are not agents or employees of the university.

At the seminar, Garrett agreed with Langford. He said students should try to work out disagreements with the administration before taking legal action. "But sometimes your only recourse is in the courts," he added.

Shugrue said students have a right to sue the regents, but not with money that could be considered state funds.

Adversaries

"No one ever said the price of protecting those rights was going to be free," said Shugrue. He said students should try to avoid an adversary relationship with administrators unless it is absolutely necessary.

Forbes asked Shugrue if there is a time when students are barred from taking issues to the courts. Shugrue said students only lose access to the legal system when they run out of money to pay legal fees.

Shugrue suggested that students who want to sue the regents on the student regent salary dispute should find an attorney who would take the case on a "contingent basis." Under such an arrangement, the attorney would have to take the chance of not being paid if the case was decided in favor of the regents.

Langford said after the seminar the search for an attorney willing to work under such terms has led to discussions with a number of area lawyers.

Yesteryear

Responsibility is the price of freedom.

And responsibility in the patriotic, economic or political realm, as in the day to-day life, must inevitably be shouldered in proportion to a man's ability to carry it. The college graduate has evidenced, by virtue of his successful completion of prescribed college curricula leading to a degree, his ability to shoulder more of the load than his fellow man. Lest we gloat over this conclusion, it might be pointed out that there is little to indicate that today's graduate is carrying his share of responsibility. On the contrary, an outsider, a visitor to these shores, might well wonder what use our country is making of this vast store of untapped intellectual and moral wealth we so often boast of.

We cannot, by hopeful words, change the course of history. The solution, like Aristotle's concept of the soul, must be a cumulative thing, reaching its fruition after much searching and struggle. For a country to steer its course wisely toward a better way of life, leaders are needed.

We can no longer simply ask ourselves upon graduation if we are ready to assume this responsibility. That decision was snatched away with the first atomic explosion and with the committal of our fighting forces in Korea. The legacy of leadership has come with the secrets of atomic fission. We are leaders in a world that needs leading badly. It is a job in which there is no room for failure.

'Sweet Bird': good actors trapped in a 'bad script'

When I look at the program for a play and find names such as Chance Wayne, Fly, Princess Kosmonopolis, and Heavenly Finley among the characters, it's probably going to be a long night.

In the case of Tennessee Williams' "Sweet Bird of Youth," I was right.

The play, which will be at the Omaha Community Playhouse until March 28, might appeal to fans of "Dallas" and its clones. I had trouble sorting out the complicated, improbable plot.

The play is about Chance Wayne, a young man trying to cash in on his fading youth and beauty. All he wants from life is money, an acting career, and Heavenly Finley, the daughter of his home town political boss.

Beneath Chance's shallow exterior lies a shallow interior. Joel Knutson works hard to give Chance some depth, but not much can be done with lines like "This is the home of my heart. Don't make me homeless."

Even though Chance is not believable for a moment, it's still fascinating, at first, to watch him change emotions. One moment he flirts with Princess Kosmonopolis, an aging actress; a few seconds later he snarls at her when he demands money and an acting contract. Later, he speaks tenderly of Heavenly. It's all acted well enough, but there's something mechanical about Chance Wayne.

Elaine Jabenis — though her role as the Princess is as much a cartoon as Knutson's — at least looks as though she's having a good time. The Princess can only feel young when she's drunk, stoned, or making love to younger men.

We are also treated to the domestic squabbles of the Finleys. Boss Finley, played by Thomas Harvey, is sort of a minor-league J. R. Finley's understated nastiness is a relief compared to the violent, drunken, and hysterical people around him.

Take Tom Junior, Boss Finley's son. Tom Junior, played by Robert Sharemet, does Finley's dirty work, such as organizing a campaign, "Youth for Finley," and roughing up people Finley dislikes — especially Chance Wayne.

There's Heavenly (Diana Andrade),

Finley's daughter, who has had an affair with Chance since age 15. But she's never on stage long enough for the audience to figure out why.

Gail Erwin as Miss Lucy, Finley's mistress, can't decide which makes her angrier: being made to sit at the back of the room during a Finley campaign banquet, or discovering that Fly, the hotel bartender played by UNO student Rod Freeman, told Tom Junior about the night she wrote "Boss Finley can't cut the mustard" on the ladies room mirror.

No one, with the possible exception of Boss Finley, is sober through all of this.

There are plenty of bad moments. The worst occurs when Boss Finley attempts to comfort Heavenly — who has just gone through an unspecified operation — by giving her unlimited credit at a local department store.

The climax, a "Youth for Finley" rally, is the best scene but seems to have little to do with the play. While a fight ensues in a cocktail lounge, the TV shows close-ups of all the characters in the brawl. The effect is startling, but it has little to do with what went on before or goes on after the fight.

For the most part, "Sweet Bird of Youth" is the sad case of good actors trapped in a bad script.

Comment—

Selective omission

In last week's kudos and kicks we gave the boot to a number of campus organizations for not participating in an upcoming voter registration drive. We are happy to give kudos to two of those groups which are firmly committed to the project. Both College Republicans and the UNO chapter of the NAACP were able to clear up some misunderstandings and will now lend their able assistance to the effort.

If we could give kudos to ideas we'd hand one to the idea of students writing their representatives in Washington about the student aid programs targeted for insane cuts. Those programs are the determining factor for many students who are seeking a college education.

We use every ounce of muscle in our legs as we give a big, swift kick to NU President Ronald Roskens. For years the central administration has fought to maintain the open admissions policy of the university system.

During that time, many members of the Board of Regents have fought to strap the system with selective admissions restrictions.

We believe the university has a responsibility to provide the opportunity for the citizens of Nebraska who seek a college education.

Roskens has now presented an alternative to the regents' proposal. We are expected to view the proposal as a compromise. We do not. We see the proposal for what it really is — a selling of principles for the benefit of political expediency.

What must be understood about this campus is the non-traditional nature of many of our students. Unlike the three favored campuses — UNL, UNMC and the mighty Institute of Agriculture — UNO has many students who aren't recent high school graduates.

We suggest strong retention — not admission — standards.

End justify means?

By the time you read this, it is likely that the fate of Abscam felon Harrison A. Williams will have been decided by the U.S. Senate.

The New Jersey Democrat was convicted last year by a federal jury of trying to use his influence to advance a private mining venture.

In his defense before the senate, he claimed that he was framed by the FBI. He said that he was a victim of investigative zeal. He shouted his innocence, even though he admitted that he met with Abscam con men for a total of seven times throughout the year.

"If there is anything I kick myself about, it is that," he said during his four-hour oratory in front of his fellow senators.

Although there is no doubt in our minds that the 62-year-old senator is guilty, there is disagreement among the Gateway editors as to the FBI's methods employed to convict him.

On the one hand, the FBI created a situation that entrapped and perhaps enticed Williams to commit a crime that otherwise would not have occurred.

Suppose the FBI used such tactics on you, your mother, or any other private citizen. If they went undercover with the intention of making a crime look so attractive that you just couldn't resist, who then, pray tell, would be guilty — the FBI or you or both?

On the other hand, we have a public official whose office, by its very nature, yields great power and influence. His constituents voted for him with the idea that he would represent their interests and not abuse the power granted him.

If the FBI knew he was committing crimes and could not prove it through legal means, such as obtaining permission from a judge to wiretap, then is it not the FBI's duty to bring it to our attention?

So, we are faced with two questions here.

One is the age-old philosophical argument — does the end justify the means?

The other boils down to this: Do the same laws apply to public citizens as well as private?

You decide.

Bixler will present a "Professional Image" seminar at 7:30 p.m. Monday, March 15 in the Milo Bail Student Center Nebraska Room.

The seminar is designed to help students develop an effective wardrobe, learn the advantages of nonverbal communication, and profit from projecting a professional image.

Bixler said the "fashion industry is ripping us off. They don't want women to wear last year's clothes because they can't make any money at it."

Bixler said that fashions such as the mini-skirt and split skirt, which the industry is reviving, have no place in the business world.

The seminar is sponsored by the Student Programming Organization and Career Planning and Placement. Admission is $1 for UNO students.

Ballplayers mix vets, rookies

The UNO Mavericks' baseball season has gotten off to a cold start with the lack of outdoor practice.

"We've had some good practices," said Coach Bob Gates, "but it's all been inside. We haven't been on our field yet."

Gates said he's hoping for some outdoor practice before the team travels to Murray, Ky., during spring break to face two Division I teams, Murray State and Rutgers.

Eleven men are returning from last year's team which ended its season with a 31-16 record and the NCC championship.

One of the returnees is Dave Poulichek, the only senior on the team, who was named the NCC co-Most Valuable Player of last season's tournament.

Poulichek became the all-time career home run champion at UNO with 19 last year and also established a single-season RBI mark with 43.

John Taylor made last year's all-conference squad by winning the NCC batting crown with a .475 average.

Other players named to the all-conference team were rightfielder Kirk Nelson and pitcher Gregg Larsen. Gates was named coach of the year.

But the team will not depend on the veterans

Baseball season starts as UNO squad travels

"Our strongest point is going to be defensive infield," said Gates. Two freshmen covering the infield will be Clarke Lange and Rick Ahrens. "They've been doing both defense and offense," Gates said. "And we'll be expecting John McGuire to help them."

Veterans Glen Schuetze, Mark King and Doug Holmberg will head the pitching staff along with Perry Fisher, Lonnie Pegg, Barry Park, and Jerry Mohr.

One of the catchers this year is Rick Stambaugh, a junior college transfer from Waterloo, Ind. "We're really depending on him to step in and catch them for us," said Gates.

"They're all anxious to get out and play," he said. "I'm looking forward to the season myself. We've got a lot of student athletes. I'm really pleased with their attitude."

Assisting Gates this season will be Bob Nowaczky, a former head coach for Bryan High School. Dan Hug, an infielder on last year's team, will be the undergraduate assistant.

"We've got 17 Division I games in our schedule this year," said Gates. "And with Mankato coming into our region, that will make it a good, tough season."

Intramural Update

The Big Donut Heads Book II were upset in the opening round of the "B" League playoffs 34-31 in overtime by the unranked Kamikazies. The much-improved Kamikazies were able to control the tempo of the game, and took advantage of the Donut Heads' cold shooting to post the upset.

The Donut Heads got off to a quick start against the Kamikazies, 5-0. The Kamikazies experienced shooting problems throughout the first half, and trailed at halftime 12-7.

Both teams warmed up in the second half and started scoring more consistently. The Kamikazies quickly erased their halftime deficit. The lead then exchanged hands several times the rest of the game.

The score was tied at 27 with 2 seconds left in regulation play when a shot from deep in the corner by the Donut Heads fell short and the game went into overtime.

The Kamikazies quickly established control in overtime, and jumped on top 34-29. The Donut Heads hit a late basket to make the final score 34-31.

The Donut Heads were led by Mark King, who scored 12 points. Daryl Pietzmier added 9 points and Dan Sweetwood chipped in 8.

The Kamikazies were led by Jim O'Leary, who scored 10, and Pat Webb with 8. Bob Whidley also threw in 7 points and grabbed several key rebounds.
